

JACKSON HOLE, WYOMING

A Piccadilly Perennial Favorite!

Every ski area has its story of how it was founded, to the evolution of how it became what it is today, with many stories and characters that fill the spaces in between. The history of Jackson Hole Mountain Resort is no different. The resort has seen its fair share of changes over the years from owners, to lifts, hotels, restaurants and more. Prior to 1961 the current location of the resort was a Girl Scout ranch which Paul McCollister purchased. McCollister, with the assistance of 2 partners formed the Jackson Hole Ski Corporation in 1963. The following year they began construction with Après Vous mountain opening to the public in 1964, with two double chairlifts. Two years after that, the original Jackson Hole Tram opened and held 52 people, taking passengers to the top of Rendezvous mountain in just over 10 minutes. That December the resort officially opened and Pepi Stiegler, reigning Olympic gold medalist at the time, was hired to be the ski school director. Several national ski races and competitions were held at Jackson Hole in the following years. With a notable moment being the final International ski race of the season in 1967, the Wild West classic in which Jean-Claude Killy of France and Nancy Green of Canada were crowned as that year's world champions. Jean-Claude was quoted by Sports Illustrated as saying "If there is a better ski mountain in the United States, I haven't skied it."

Known for its famous terrain and vertical drop, JHMR also receives a whopping average of 500" of snowfall yearly. The resort has 133 trails, 13 lifts, and the most continuous vertical of any ski area in the U.S. It rises 4,139 feet from the valley floor to the top of Rendezvous Mountain. But Jackson Hole is more than black diamonds and steep terrain, as it also offers many beginner- and intermediate-skier friendly runs. Then there's the town of Jackson Hole, which boasts unlimited and unparalleled shopping, dining, and entertainment experiences. Come find out why PSC returns to this ski gem every few years... the scene of so many fun memories.
